

Dear Editor,

I found this postcard on the local market here in the Big City, & thought you might find it of interest. I am not certain whether or not it pertains to a legitimate business concern; irrespective of this, it may prove pertinent to a spectacle which I witnessed myself, just days ago. A Grand Procession had been arranged to bring the new Emperor into the public eye. I of course joined the throng. The day was lit by a brilliant sunlight, and the crowd was bubbling with anticipation...but before the Emperor was even within sight, a ripple surged through the crowd, "The Emperor's wearing ~~no~~ clothes! The Emperor is ~~naked~~!" Everybody gasped and leaned and when the Emperor at last passed through, the crowd was roaring ~~and laughing~~; pointing and crying at the ~~king's~~ sight. He was not, of course, ~~naked~~ - however he was wearing only ~~a loincloth~~, ~~and~~ ~~nothing~~ ~~at~~ ~~all~~ ~~but~~ ~~his~~ ~~processional~~ ~~garments~~. Why on earth did his advisers ~~advise~~ advise against it? Rest assured I will be investigating further, but should this snippet be deemed appropriate for publication please do so anonymously, for obvious reasons! Your obedient servant;

A.N.
